

Our definition of community has evolved over the past few weeks.

If asked at the onset of this health crisis, we may have replied simply, community is a group of people living in the same area, with Concord Hospital its common thread.

Today, however, we humbly share our Concord Hospital community is much more. It's a fellowship; a family, from near and far, sharing the same burdens and hopes, fighting for the common goal – to endure the COVID-19 pandemic; and, emerge a stronger community, united in health.

From thousands of hand-sewn masks in an array of cheerful fabrics, coveted N95 masks, much needed hand sanitizer; to tents for our testing sites, 3D printed mask extenders, and countless others, gifts have been arriving in a steady parade of deliveries.

Gifts of hope, words of encouragement, received daily and shared with all staff. These messages set the stage each day and provide an intangible boost to face the battle. Tens of thousands of dollars in donations, well wishes and support messages, given without a second thought, to help Concord Hospital fight the fight.

That's community.

Thank you for your outpouring of gifts.

Thank you for allowing us to feel and show our gratitude with grace.

You have shown Concord Hospital this community truly stands together during this unimaginable time.
